

Maritime Trip Day 12 September 03, 2010 67 degrees F, cloudy and hazy

Finally the cooler weather we were expecting! We savored another great breakfast at the B&B in Levis. We packed up and appreciated getting back into our campers at 9:30 am and heading down the road. We stopped at a seafood roadside restaurant called Poissonnerie Doucet & Fils for lunch. The waitress did her best to translate the all French menu for us. Between what I remember from college French class, hand gestures and the waitress's efforts, we finally ordered. Wayne passed on the seafood due to his shellfish allergies but the rest of us were pleasantly surprised when our fresh from the sea catches (Halibut, shrimp and salmon) arrived! Everything was delicious and flowing over the edge of the plate! A homemade fig cake came with the meal which quickly disappeared.

We found an IGA and restocked a few grocery items that we could not buy at the market in Quebec City.

We stopped at the PointeAu Père where Wayne and Bill toured the Onondaga Submarine while Lorene and I studied the map. The temperature has dropped to 57 degrees and is quite windy. The tide is out and we see a rocky shoreline. There are many little cottages along the seashore. Across the St. Lawrence Seaway there are mountains.

We arrived at the Campground Annie at 5:00. It is a real deal at $20.00 a night. We had to book a 2-night minimum because this is Canada's Labour Day weekend. The site backs up to a wooded area. We pulled out snacks and margaritas for dinner followed by dominoes. Wayne won, again!
