

Maritime Trip Day 13 September 04, 2010 57 degrees F, rainy and windy

Going to Michigan for the Summer affords us the opportunity to miss the Hurricane season in Florida, so here we are in Metis Sur Mer, Quebec, Canada watching the wind and rain offered by Hurricane Earl! The folks here are thrilled as it has been nearly 30 days without rain and the water table was very low...so much so that we were told to boil any ground water that we used! We did a couple loads of laundry and tidied by the campers.

Wayne became very concerned about his camper when the levelers started shifting as the ground water created big runoffs under his unit so despite the weather, he decided we should go into town in his unit to get it out of the soggy puddle! Several things started malfunctioning but no answer could be found so we toughed on. We found the Center d'Art restaurant (right on the seashore) that the Guinns had recommended. It is a strange collection of outdoor works of nature-art and indoor painting and small sculptures. You can see some of it on info@centredart.net. The food was delicious, the bread homemade and the tea hot!

Afterwards we returned to the campground where Wayne requested a different site. As he parked it, he notices all the problems had solved themselves! The
